Consecration

Epiklesis (Invocation of the Holy Spirit)

In the Eucharistic Prayer, the epiklesis leads to the Consecration. The Holy Spirit is invoked to effect the transubstantiation of the gifts of bread and wine. As already indicated for the four major prayers, the celebrant holds his hands outstretched over the gifts with his palms down. The bell may be rung, with moderation, just before the celebrant begins the epiklesis.

Consecration of the Bread

He takes one large bread into his hands at "he took bread", . He does not take the paten or a ciborium into his hands. He does not break or tear the bread at "he broke".

He bows forward slightly while saying the words of Consecration, "clearly and distinctly, as their meaning demands": "Take this all of you, and eat it: this is my body which will be given up for you."

The elevation of the Host should be a gracious and unhurried "showing" of the Body of Christ to His people. Then he places both hands on the corporal and genuflects in adoration, without haste and without bowing his head.

Consecration of the Wine

(Priest) When supper was ended, he took the cup. Again he gave you thanks and praise, gave the cup to his disciples, and said:

Take this, all of you, and drink from it: this is the cup of my blood, the blood of the new and everlasting covenant. It will be shed for you and for all men so that sins may be forgiven. Do this in memory of me.

Standing upright, he then elevates the chalice carefully with both hands, directly over the corporal. Then he places both hands on the corporal and genuflects in adoration,

A bell may be rung at each elevation, according to local custom. If incense is used, the Host and Precious Blood are incensed at each elevation.

The Latin hymn De Sancto Brendano is a 1000 years old.

It was written around 1000AD by Guido of Ivrea, probably a priest of the Cathedral town of Ivrea, 50 km north of the city of Turin in northern Italy. At the time, St. Brendan was already a distant memory, 500 years in the past, but he had become famous throughout Christian Europe because of the story of his travels, the Navigatio Sancti Brendani. Guido, the writer, also wrote three other hymns in honour of Irish Saints: to Saint Brigid, Killian, and Patrick, and all four hymns were entered in the hymn book kept by bishop Blessed Warmund (930-1011). This hymn manuscript no 85 of the Ivrea Cathedral Library, is today one of the city's treasures.

A Hymn to St. Brendan

Sons and daughters of God our living Father
Your voices together raise.

Chanting our ancient hymn to its sacred music in St. Brendan's praise.

Gentle and chaste, he left both land and safety,
renounced all earthly music, all earth's desires,
Now, in his new found land, he sings, a father
to all his people, in angel choirs.

Brendan, our navigator, steer us safe from storm and shipwreck and the deeps of sin.
Westward across life's ocean, to the land of promise with all our kin.

Pray to the Father, and to Christ our gentle
high-king nourished at Mary's breast;
And to the life-giving Spirit to feed our souls
with honey from the high halls of the blest.
